Description

Interesting view of the Pool of London, an area known on the Thames near Tower Bridge where freight was loaded and unloaded from the earliest times of the City of London through the 1950s.

I'm sure this piece was painted by one of the many men who worked in the area rather than a full-time painter. The piece has a quaint feel and is a wonderful view, with great historical appeal.

The piece is framed in a vintage English 1940's gold frame.
