Description

Wonderful Early Victorian English watercolor of a little girl. The piece is full of quality and precise brushwork giving the painting a great feeling. I think the frame is later possibly circa 1900 but it suits the paintings very well. I'm sure the piece would have been painted by a person of wealth as painting and drawing became a massive part-time hobby for wealthy people during the 19th century. It might have been one of the child's parents who did this.
